Description of Property and Eligibility Determination (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map and photo)

This small one-story dwelling has a standing-seam metal roof and is side-gabled. The window and door openings have been sealed with plywood and the siding is designed of asphalt with brick texture. The structure is in poor condition and stands vacant.

Prince George's County continued to be dominated by its agricultural heritage during the first half of the 20th century. Its population between 1910 and 1930 rose from 36,000 to almost 60,000 people, but its population growth was primarily limited to the settlements of the new towns and villages brought about by the Baltimore and Potomac rail lines. Crain Highway benefitted both Charles and Prince George's County in opening up the area around the new artery to increased residential and commercial development. The development along Crain Highway was not as intense in Prince George's County as it was in Charles County. The farmers closer to the urban markets of Washington began to diversify their crops and began to produce more products for the urban populations. Grains and potatoes were in demand in the cities and the access to the rail lines within Prince George's County assured the farmers' crops safe and easy delivery to the urban centers.
